Intramurals

Law students. Intense. Competitive. Always right.

Little did we know what we were in for when we started the Suffolk Law School Intramural program a year ago. When the Ridgeway Building opened in the Spring of 1991 intramurals found a home. With help from Coach Nelson and the athletic department, the law school slid into a nighttime slot at the gym, where heated hoops games and intense volleyball were played.

Volleyball proved to be slightly less physical, though not any less intense, than basketball. The introduction of a co-ed sport into intramurals proved an excellent means of meeting students from different sections and different years. The finals proved to be a 2C match-up. The Chiefs and the Schmidt Club, served it up in a grudge match, with the Chiefs prevailing in a close match.

The Basketball season of Spring 1992 proved to be a battle to the end, resulting in a third championship for the Laurentano. These legendary men from 3B will long be known in the hallowed halls of the Donahue Building as the foundation for Suffolk Law Intramurals.

Many people deserve accolades for their help in the intramurals program: Tom Sullivan, Jackie Perczek, Jorge Neves, Tony Laurentano, and especially Michele Randazzo who created and established the intramurals program. Additionally credit goes to the referees for dealing with often hyper-law-students-with-attitudes.

Evening Students

Suffolk University Law School was founded to democratize the study of law by offering an evening program allowing those who needed to work to support themselves to also pursue a legal career. Suffolk's Evening Division continues to offer a legal education to those who "must study, if at all, by night" as founder Gleason L. Archer stated in 1906.

This year 176 Evening Students will complete their four-year trek across the bricks of Temple Street. This journey brought them to class three, four and even five evenings a week in the hope of starting a new, or augmenting a current, career. Doctors, engineers, accountants, teachers, paralegals, law clerks, government employees and other professionals make up a large part of the student body of the Evening Division. As different as they are, they seem to share a certain Esprit de Corps that forms through shared adversity. Many good friendships were formed despite the wearisome and harried schedules of students. With the experience relegated to a memory, the night student can rightly claim a feeling of special satisfaction that they have completed a full-time course of study that few would attempt and fewer would endure.

Editor's Note

In April 1991 several students discussed the idea of reviving the Suffolk Law Yearbook. We thought it would be a fun, fairly simple project. Little did we know how much time and planning it actually took. Despite the occasional frustration, and with the help of countless people, the 1992 edition is complete. Key to the production of the yearbook were Pat Yung, who was willing to do anything at any time, and Kevin O'Neil, who spent the better part of Tax I discussing the book and continued to help after Graduation. Special thanks to a certain little sister whose photographic talents added to several sections of this book. Finally, I would like to thank the anonymous person who thought of some of the more creative captions in the book.
